Annually state law requires the Advisory Council for Education of Students with Disabilities to provide a report to the Governor, General Assembly, and the State Board presenting its views of the progress or lack of progress made in special education by the state, its agencies and institutions, and its school districts during the preceding year. The Department of Education is responsible for managing the Advisory Council. This year's report is on a delay and represents the status of the council's goals for the 2021-22 school year.
